PhD – Doctor of Philosophy

Candidates for the award of PhD are required prepare a thesis, typically between 30,000 and 80,000 words long. The thesis can be in the form of a traditional thesis or, for a PhD by publication, a suite of published papers presented with a substantive contextual narrative. The thesis, an independent and original contribution to knowledge, is then defended at an oral examination known as the viva voce, or the viva. Typically a PhD will take 3 full-time years to complete or 6 years if studying part-time.

The information below on how to apply refers specifically to Doctor of Philosophy programmes.

Professional Doctorates

Professional doctorates involve a significant taught element followed by a period of research.

Candidates are required to present and defend a thesis in the same way as for a PhD. The University of Stirling offers a number of professional doctorates (links below go to entry criteria and how to apply for each programme) :

- Doctor of Applied Social Research
- Doctor of Business Administration
- Doctor of Diplomacy
- Doctor of Education
- Doctor of Midwifery
- Doctor of Nursing
- Doctor of Professional Health Studies
- PhD in TESOL Research

Master's by research (MA/MSc/LLM)

A Master's by research degree focuses on research expertise and prepares you for professional work or PhD study. A typical Master's programme at Kent takes one year full-time or two years part-time to complete, half the time it takes to complete a Master's in the US and Europe.

Research Master's programmes require the submission of an extensive thesis or practice-led research project. A thesis at this level must show the ability to conduct an independent study and to understand its relationship to a wider field of knowledge.

View all MA degreesView all MSc degreesView all LLM degrees

Master of Philosophy (MPhil)

The MPhil or Master of Philosophy is a research degree similar to a PhD, although the the MPhil dissertation is normally shorter than the PhD thesis. Many students register on to an MPhil with the ambition to progress on to a PhD.

Studying an MPhil at Kent takes about two years full-time or three years part-time to complete.

Your MPhil thesis must show the ability to conduct an original investigation, to test ideas, to understand the relationship of the theme to the wider field of knowledge, and to organise material appropriately.
